Overview of 2018 Republican primaries

See also: Florida in Texas: state legislature Republican primaries, 2018 and Texas state legislature Republican primaries, 2018

The 2018 Texas state legislature Republican primaries featured conflict between two factions. One group was led by Speaker of the House Joe Straus III and the preferred policies or issues the education financing and property taxes. The anti-Straus wing included members of the Texas Freedom Caucus and was generally in favor of limiting state spending, cutting taxes, and limiting the scope of government and the judiciary branches. The pro-Straus wing included prominent legislators allied with Straus and organizations such as the Associated Republicans of Texas and the Texas Association of Business. To learn more about Texas politics and the conflict between them, visit our Texas state legislature page and our Texas Politics page.

The primaries occurred on March 6, 2018, with runoffs on May 22, 2018. There were 49 contested state legislative Republican primaries, six/seven/eight contested primaries in 2016, 2014, and 2012 and 2010. Scorecards

See also: State legislature scorecards and State legislature scorecards in Texas

A scorecard evaluates a legislator's voting record. Its purpose is to inform voters about the legislator's political positions. Because legislators cast hundreds of votes every year, it is impossible for any scorecard to be comprehensive. Instead, scorecards focus on votes that a group's leaders think are important or interesting enough to score votes on. Some votes are scored because a group's leaders believe the vote is a key vote on the issue and the vote is important to members of the group, but other votes are scored because the group's leaders want to make a point about how a legislator votes on a certain issue.

Ballotpedia is in the process of developing an encyclopedia list of published scorecards. Some states have a limited number of available scorecards or scorecards produced only by select groups. It is Ballotpedia's goal to incorporate all available scorecards regardless of the issue area or political ideology.
